問題02

By now the human has taken over such extensive control of the life systems of the Earth that the future will be dependent on human decision to an extent never dreamed of in previous times. We are deciding what species will live or perish, we are determining the chemical structure of the soil and the air and the water, and we are mapping out the areas of the wilderness that will be allowed to function in their own natural states.

問題04

According to a manga editor who teaches at a university in Kyoto, the seeds of manga's mass appeal in Japan were sown in the early postwar period, when kids began to spend all their pocket money on manga, starting with Weekly Shonen Magazine. Such was their love for the medium that they remained enthusiastic readers well beyond childhood and into their adult years, becoming ideal consumers for a rapidly-growing publishing industry that kept coming up with new titles.

問題05

Why do we continue to build with concrete? Simply put, concrete is cheap, versatile, quick to erect and requires no additional fireproofing. It's also a known entity, and that carries a lot of weight. < 中略 >

Langenbach has a more skeptical take. “Making concrete is a huge business, so much so that it's sort of become identified as the mafia — at least in this country (the US).” Historically, there have been connections to the New York mob, and there's certainly still money to be made.
