問題01

The same was still more true of the Poles themselves, two unique but featureless geographical points on the planet, whose inaccessibility attracted generations of explorers. There was no reason to go there, except to test the limits of human endurance, to declare that mankind was master of the planet, and to establish which nation was really the best at this kind of thing.

Consider the similarities of “family photographs” throughout the modern industrial societies. No matter what the society, a wedding can be scarcely said to have taken place unless the participants are photographed. A baby is not properly born until it is “snapped,” and not to photograph it regularly thereafter can seem a form of child neglect. Merely to display a family photograph album can have a highly symbolic effect.
